FROM THE EDITOR

Hello Again!

Another month has slipped passed: I hope that your summer is proceeding well. Deb Luper is leading lots of hikes Tuesday and Thursday evenings. I have heard a rumor that Annette Smith also has something lined out in August... more on that later. Jayme Mack and crew had a decent hike over Resurrection Trail, with only a little rain. For something off our regular track, John Recktenwald is offering to lead a hike on the Pinnel Mountain Trail.

If YOU have a trip that you are interested in leading, don't be shy! Share the outdoors with a few friends, old and new; explore a new trail or crunch out an old chestnut... Submit trips at club meetings, or on the MCAK website at www.mcak.org. Or send them to me, along with a trip report from one of your adventures to mtndamsel@alaska.net. Speaking of trip reports, next month we'll read about a misadventure that Wayne Todd and friends managed to make through.

Don't forget to cook up something tasty for the summer picnic. I hope to see everyone there.

Until then...

Blue Skies... Amsl

IN MEMORIUM

In Remembrance of Climber Andrew Embick

- Steve Davis

May 29, 2003 was a sad day for Alaska climbers. It was on that day that well known climber and long time Valdez resident Andrew Embick took his own life. He leaves a wife and two daughters. Most climbers remember Andy for organizing the Annual Valdez Ice Climbing Festival (the first so-called ice climbers' rendezvous in North America). Beginning in 1982, climbers would travel to Valdez during the President's Day weekend for three-filled days of climbing the "big ice" and would stay at his home which became a defacto climber's refuge with up to 45 people sleeping in the basement. By 1984 the Embick home was the center for all route information and evening parties and slide shows. Climbers from around the world started coming to the festival to experience the great climbing. Who can forget the evening slide shows where we would re-live some of Valdez's greatest ascents with the latest Dire Straits album at full volume! The "gear room" where the smell of damp ropes, sweaty gore-tex and drying boot liners permeated the house. The evening swapping of tales and the sounds of resharpening ice tools and dull crampons. What a lot of climbers don't know were his other accomplishments.

Andy came to Alaska in the late 1970's after college and medical school. He was already familiar with Alaska, having traveled to the state and with others made the first ascent of the East Buttress of Middle Triple Peak in the Kitchatna Spires (a route that was profiled in Roper and Steck's Fifty Classic Climbs and still regarded as one of the most difficult routes in the United States).

Andy will be remembered as an energetic and colorful fellow. He was a pioneer during the golden-era of Valdez ice climbing, making numerous first ascents with many partners, most notably Roman Dial, Carl Tobin, Brian Teale, and Chuck Comstock. His 3 x 5 index cards with all the route information eventually led to his writing of "Blue Ice and Black Gold", a ice climber's guidebook to Valdez ice climbs. This book documented more than 400 routes. A number of these early ascents were made by MCA members. It was during this period that Andy took an interest in white water paddling. He soon began to pursue "first descents" with the same enthusiasm as his climbing. He made the first descent of Devil's Canyon on the Talkeetna River, and soon had a long list of paddling accomplishments. A white-water paddlers' guidebook soon followed.

Later in the 1980's Andy made an early ascent of Yosemite's Astroman with Ron Kauk, followed by an expedition to Braldu/Biafo region of Pakistan's Karakoram range where he made a first ascent with Galen Rowell of a spectacular rock tower followed by a first descent of the raging Braldu River gorge by kayak.

Andy was active in the local social scene and served on the American Alpine Club's national Board of Directors and was elected Vice-President. He was also a founder of the Valdez Alpine Club.

Andy had recently returned from a 6 month sabbatical in Pakistan where he volunteered as a physician in a remote refugee camp. His proudest achievement though was helping his wife Kathy raise two daughters in Valdez and instill upon them his values for the outdoors and adventure. We will never know or understand the reasons why he took his own life. What we do understand is that he is gone and that he will be sorely missed by all climbers who remember the golden-era of Valdez ice climbing. There aren't many Valdez routes that Andy hadn't personally climbed over the last 25 years. He has touched us all, whether we realize it or not. Think of him the next time you are in Valdez ice climbing and pushing your limits. An Anchorage memorial service will be scheduled later this summer. Details will be provided to the club as they become known.
