Military waste cleanup resumes

By RUSS GRIMM
Mirror Writer

The Army Corps of Engineers soon will be directing the second year of military waste cleanup on Kodiak Island.

This year at the Buskin Beach site, Jacobs Engineering will be removing 40 more fuel storage tanks and another 1,000 cubic yards of fuel-contaminated soil.

Back in 1996, under the Federal Defense Environmental Restoration Program (DERP), preliminary studies revealed contamination in several locations around Kodiak.

In 1997, the Corps of Engineers contracted Jacobs Engineering to remove the accumulations of toxic waste.

"Jacobs Engineering will begin this year's remediation in two or three weeks," said Pat Richardson of the Army Corps of Engineers public relations department. The project, which will cost $2 million to $3 million, has already removed tons of contaminated soil and equipment.

"Last year, Jacobs removed 1,000 cubic yards of PCB-contaminated soil from Long Island and sent it to a hazardous waste collection area in the Lower 48," she said.

According to Richardson most of the other activity in 1997 was at the Buskin River site. Workers dug up 79 fuel storage tanks and shipped them off the island.

About 3,000 cubic yards of fuel-contaminated soil were excavated, stockpiled and treated by burning off the fuel.

That much soil would fill a space the size of a football field 30 feet high.

Jacobs also removed 14 PCB-contaminated transformers, 20 lead batteries, and cleaned out two military grease pits using the burning treatment.

On Long Island, the engineering group will continue remediation of PCB and fuel-contaminated soil. Richardson expects another year of work on the several Long Island sites.

Cape Chiniak will see continued removal of PCB and fuel-contaminated soils.

Finally, the Corps will be doing preliminary assessments on five other sites: Lazy Bay, Chirikof Island, Afognak Island, and Burma Road.

Expected completion date for Long island is one year, Buskin will be two to three more years, Cape Chiniak could finish this year.

The Coast Guard Base cleanup will take four to five years to complete, considering the number of fuel-contaminated areas.

Richardson cautioned that completion dates assume continued funding from the Federal Government.

A public meeting with Jacobs Engineering and the Army Corps of Engineers will be held tonight at 7 p.m. in the Buskin River Inn. This will be an information session for small companies who may be interested in working on the project.

Borough will manage Chiniak lands if Exxon council buys it

By SUE JEFFREY
Mirror Writer

Prime Leisnoi property at Chiniak may be spared from future development now that the Kodiak Island Borough promises to manage it.

In a letter to the Exxon Valdez Trustee Council, Borough Mayor Jerome Selby formally asked the trustee council to acquire "high value habitat lands on the Chiniak Peninsula." In turn, the borough would become the "responsible managing party," he said.

"The state does not want to oversee another state park, the federal government isn't interested in the property and the borough needs to manage the Chiniak beaches anyway," Selby pointed out at a recent borough work session.

"We need to provide port-a-potties and dumpsters, especially during the summer months, because the beaches are a mess."

Besides being popular recreation areas, Chiniak beaches and tidelands are important habitat for many species affected by the oil spill.

Much of the uplands are highly valued, as well, because Chiniak's Spruce forests are prime nesting habitat for the marbled murrelet, a sea bird substantially injured by the oil spill, says Bud Cassidy, borough land manager.

"Marbled murrelets are not nest builders but they come ashore and lay their eggs in 'egg cups' on top of old mossy limbed branches in old-growth Spruce forests," he explained. "For a long time, people did not realize Chiniak was prime marbled murrelet habitat because they come ashore at night."

Leisnoi owns most of the uplands at Chiniak and is currently logging the area. The Native corporation supports the land sale, offering to sell 18,000 acres to the trustee council.

Judy Lucas, a Chiniak resident also championing the purchase under the banner, "Friends of Cape Chiniak Park," says Cape Chiniak is a treasure worth preserving. The area contains a sea lion haul-out, archaeological sites, stocked lakes, salmon streams and some of the best whale watching areas on the island, she points out.

"The purchase would give us a chance to save the area from logging....," Lucas says, and because it is on the road system, it is very valuable to all of Kodiak...Friends of Cape Chiniak Park are are thankful for the borough stepping in and being a willing sponsor."

It is not likely the trustee council would buy all of the critical habitat on the Chiniak Peninsula because the council is running out of money, Selby says. Therefore, the borough will work with Leisnoi, private landowners and the Chiniak community to prioritize parcels in the area.

At the other end of the Kodiak road system, Leisnoi and the trustee council are in final negotiations for the purchase of about 1,000 acres of rain-forest at Termination Point. Leisnoi and a group of local residents are also petitioning the council to buy Long Island.

The trustee council has already purchased about 300,000 acres of land in the Kodiak Archipelago, including 26,000 acres on Shuyak Island, which the state designated as an Alaska state park last year.

The council also bought about 200,000 acres of Native lands deemed critical habitat areas and signed them over to the Kodiak National Wildlife Refuge.

"The federal government pays the borough 'payments in lieu of taxes' on this land," Mike Hawkes, a KNWR spokesperson said, "because it is public land which was private property removed from the local tax roll."

He figures the borough will get a $300,000 check this year from the federal government on the acquired Native lands.

She hopes spill money can save Chiniak

By JEFF RICHARDSON
Mirror Writer

After years of feuding over the future of Cape Chiniak, the Leisnoi Corporation and an area resident may have found a compromise to make everyone happy.

After a suggestion from Judy Lucas, a vocal opponent of Leisnoi's logging practices, the Native corporation is offering to sell 18,000 acres of land to the Exxon Valdez Oil Spill Trust Council.

If approved for purchase, Cape Chiniak would become a state park.

"It was kind of a coming together of the minds out in Chiniak," said Bruce Robertson, Leisnoi president. "It would benefit all of Kodiak's residents — not just Chiniak residents — if something like this went through."

Other Leisnoi property, such as Long Island, has also been submitted for purchase by the EVOS council.

But Lucas, a Chiniak resident, said a sale of the Cape would be particularly significant because it would halt extensive logging in the area. Robertson said Leisnoi is interested in the concept because it would generate revenue.

"Whether it would be a sale of the land out there or logging, it's just another avenue we have to explore in looking out for our shareholders," Robertson said.

The next step will be to convince the EVOS council Cape Chiniak is worth buying.

Eric Myers, director of the council, said five large parcels of land are now being considered for purchase, along with about 300 smaller areas.

No price proposals have been made for the Chiniak land.

For EVOS to buy an area, it must have good "restoration potential," Myers said. It also must be determined that protecting an area would help it recover from oil spill damage.

The Cape Chiniak land is being evaluated to see if it meets those requirements. Myers said the EVOS council may consider its nomination as early as May 29.

Land purchases have already secured 520,000 acres, with a total of about $380 million available for habitat protection.

Lucas said Cape Chiniak has plenty of selling points.

She said the area contains a sea lion rookery, 12 archaeological sites, stocked lakes, salmon streams, and some of the best whale watching areas on the island.

"That area always seemed like a park to me," she said. "You stand up on the hillside and it's just so spectacular. I always loved going there."

To help push the process along, Lucas is organizing a Friends of Chiniak group.

She said public comment is critical for the EVOS council to take the purchase request seriously. Other sites are farther along in the process than Cape Chiniak, and she does not want the proposal to be overlooked.

"They need to know this land is wanted and needed by the people who live around it," Lucas said. "Anybody I've talked to has shown enthusiasm and interest."

Lucas said there are still untouched, road accessible areas in Cape Chiniak, including Sequel Point and land around Roslyn Creek.

That factor could be a critical one in the EVOS evaluation. Myers said the area's logging history could affect how much restoration potential the area has, and how willing the council is to purchase the land.

To voice an opinion about the Cape Chiniak purchase, write to Eric Myers, EVOS, 645 G St., Suite 401, Anchorage, Alaska 99501-3451 or by e-mail at ericm@oilspill.state.ak.us.

Log transfer facility appeal put on hold

By SUE JEFFREY
Mirror Writer

Debate over Leisnoi's proposed log transfer facility at Myrtle Creek will continue next Tuesday.

After nearly five hours of public testimony and deliberation last night, the borough assembly moved to reconvene the hearing May 6 at 7:30 p.m.

The discussion took a surprising twist when assembly member Tuck Bonney said he would vote to overturn P&Z's decision to deny Leisnoi a permit.

"Leisnoi should be granted a permit," he said. "I think the plan is a good one...logging and fishing can work together if everyone gave a little."

Bonney, who has close ties to Chiniak and with the fishing industry as a cannery manager, said he knew he would take the heat and "probably be crucified" for his opinion. But, he said, the borough needs to foster industry in Kodiak to remain a viable community.

Borough assembly member Wayne Stevens weighed in with Bonney, saying Kodiak needs to diversify the economy.

The five-member assembly later agreed with assembly

Mike Milligan to postpone the decision since assembly members Dr. Bob Johnson and Gary Stevens were absent last night. Stevens will return by Tuesday and can enter the discussion after he listens to the hours-long testimony on tape.

Reconvening the board of adjustment hearing Tuesday, the assembly will pick up where it left off. That is, assembly members will continue deliberation on a motion left on the table which would deny Leisnoi's appeal and thereby uphold the P&Z decision to not grant Leisnoi a permit for the log facility.

From the discussion so far, assembly members Tom Abell, Robin Heinrichs and Milligan are leaning toward upholding P&Z's decision. Heinrichs and Milligan both say Leisnoi's project is not consistent with the borough's Coastal Management Program, the guiding document for coastal development in the Kodiak Island Borough.

The CMP requires that "maintenance and enhancement of fish, wildlife and vegetative resources shall be a priority of the Kodiak Island Borough."

The log transfer facility in Kalsin Bay conflicts with historically established commercial and subsistence fisheries habitat, Heinrichs, Milligan and many people last night pointed out.

Abell sided with Heinrichs and Milligan but for different reasons. After learning from Leisnoi president Bruce Roberts that the Native corporation has 340-some shareholders, Abell said, "Leisnoi only has two here speaking in favor of the project...346 don't support their own business plan."

Most of the 20-some people who testified last night acknowledged Leisnoi has a right to log its land.

"But, when it comes into the bay and disrupts livelihoods, it's time to draw the line," said Dave Odell, a Chiniak resident.

Others claimed that bark accumulation from logs transported from shore to ship would destroy the marine environment in highly productive Kalsin Bay.

"Kalsin Bay has deep holes where the fishing is good," Heinrichs said. "I understand that Kalsin Bay is a high-energy coastline and that the bark will get dispersed, but will the bark settle in those deep pockets?"

Marty Parsons of Parsons & Associates, which prepared a report reviewing the scientific evidence for Leisnoi, rebutted many of last night's arguments to deny the permit. He said bark accumulation will be very slight because Kalsin Bay is a high-energy bay and gets flushed frequently.

Many people testified that the logging ship will transport invasive species from foreign ports by exchanging ballast water near Kodiak.

Again, Parsons rebutted, saying many scientists assert that foreign vessels have the least chance of bringing non-indigenous species because the Coast Guard requires them to exchange ballast water in open waters.

"The largest threat comes from inner-coastal vessels because they are not required to document ballast exchange," Parsons said.

Both sides agreed on one point—selling Leisnoi's 18,000-acre parcel from Myrtle Creek to Sequel Point at Cape Chiniak to the Exxon Valdez Oil Spill Trustee Council (see related story in today's Kodiak Daily Mirror).

Roberts, Leisnoi's president, however, said it is a "long shot" that the EVOS will purchase it.

So the public and at least one state agency will continue to listen to the debate as the assembly decides the fate of Leisnoi's project.

"ADF&G is looking to the borough assembly for guidance and to take the lead on this issue before making its recommendations," said Mike Wiedmer, habitat biologist for Alaska Dept. of Fish & Game.

Dear Mr. Heins:

Please excuse me if I have misspelled your name as it was not entirely clear from the signature on the card. Thank you for your recent statement in regard to the Cape Chiniak parcel nominated by Lesnoi Corporation under the Exxon Valdez Oil Spill Trustee Council's habitat protection program.

The Cape Chiniak parcel is currently being evaluated from the perspective of how acquiring these lands could benefit the recovery and restoration of resources and services injured by the oil spill. Part of that evaluation will include determining whether there is a federal or state land management agency that would be able to assume responsibility for these lands. After an initial evaluation of the Chiniak nomination is completed the information will then be made available to the Trustee Council as a whole to assist in deciding how best to proceed.

Please know that the Trustee Council is very interested in public comment on restoration program activities. I will be sure to forward a copy of your statement to the Council members.

Sincerely,

Molly McCammon

We, the undersigned people, petition Leisnoi Corporation TO CEASE ALL LOGGING until provisions are in place to protect all nests, head-water and watershed areas on Kodiak Island. We feel it is incumbent upon Leisnoi to survey, mark and protect all Endangered and/or Threatened Species nests; reserve salmon habitat; and create a large enough buffer to prevent silt and other run-offs from clear cut areas; to entering the streams and watershed that supports the people of Kodiak Island.

Merge Into a Table

Purpose

You can use the REPEATROW merge code to merge information into a table from a data file. The table expands one row for each record in the data file.

Steps

- 1 Choose Merge from the Tools menu, choose Form, choose New Document Window, then choose OK.
- 2 Specify the data file you want to associate, then choose OK.
- 3 Create a 2-row table with as many columns as you want, then type a heading in each cell of the first row.
- 4 Choose Format from the Table menu, make sure Automatically Insert Row is selected, then choose OK.
- 5 If you want, move the dialog box so that you can see the entire table, then place the insertion point in the first cell of the second row.
- 6 Choose Insert Field from the Merge feature bar, select a field name, then choose Insert.
- 7 Press Tab to move to the next cell, select a field name, then choose Insert.
- 8 Repeat steps 6-7 until you insert all the fields you want, then choose Close.
- 9 Place the insertion point at the end of the last cell in the second row, then choose Merge Codes from the feature bar.
- 10 Select REPEATROW, then choose Insert.
- 11 Choose Close, then merge the file as you would any other form file.
